Annex to the letter dated 4 February 2013 from the Permanent Representative of the Republic of Korea to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General

Concept note for the Security Council open debate on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, 12 February 2013

Since the adoption of resolution 1265 (1999), the Security Council has been dealing with the issue of the protection of civilians in armed conflict, leading to the adoption of several relevant resolutions in this field, including resolutions 1296 (2000), 1674 (2006), 1738 (2006) and 1894 (2009). In particular, resolution 1894 (2009), adopted on the tenth anniversary of the Council's initial consideration of the protection of civilians, marked a significant step forward in providing guidance to ensure the effective protection of civilians on the ground.

The Security Council has also made progress in this field through such steps as presidential statements, open debates and periodic reports of the Secretary-General. It also adopted an aide-memoire on the protection of civilians in 2002, which it has since updated, with the fourth edition adopted in 2010. This has enabled the Security Council to look into various aspects of the protection of civilians and emboldened the international community's commitment to this issue.

In particular, the reports of the Secretary-General in 2009 (S/2009/277), 2010 (S/2010/579) and 2012 (S/2012/376) have contributed to the advancement of the relevant debates through the identification of five core challenges: enhancing compliance by parties to conflict with international law; enhancing compliance by non-State armed groups; enhancing protection by United Nations peacekeeping and other relevant missions; improving humanitarian access; and enhancing accountability for violations. The reports of the Secretary-General take stock of both the encouraging developments and the continuing concerns and challenges affecting civilians in contemporary armed conflicts.

The strong international normative frameworks for the protection of civilians and the important steps taken by the Security Council notwithstanding, civilians continue to account for the vast majority of casualties in armed conflict, and, as the Secretary-General pointed out in his report of 2012 (S/2012/376), the abysmal state of the protection of civilians has changed little. The situation endured by civilians in many of today's conflicts continues to warrant renewed attention and action. Normative progress during the past 14 years is of limited value if it does not translate into specific improvements in the protection of civilians on the ground.

Under the presidency of the Republic of Korea, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Kim Sung-hwan, will chair a Security Council open debate on 12 February 2013 on the protection of civilians in armed conflict. The open debate will provide all Member States and observers with a valuable opportunity to discuss ways to enhance the protection of civilians in armed conflict. It will also offer the chance to translate advancement at the normative level into tangible progress on the ground by identifying not only the positive developments made to date, but also the challenges on the horizon. The Council will be able to renew its commitment to the protection of civilians. Participants may wish to discuss the themes below.

Bolstering accountability for violations of international humanitarian and human rights law

There has been a growing need to ensure accountability for violations of international humanitarian and human rights law, both for individual perpetrators and for parties to armed conflict. In many armed conflicts, it is to a large degree the absence of accountability and, worse still, the lack in many instances of any expectation thereof, which allow violations to thrive.

In its resolution 1894 (2009), the Security Council affirmed its strong opposition to impunity for serious violations of international humanitarian law and human rights law. It also emphasized the responsibility of States to comply with their relevant obligations to end impunity and to thoroughly investigate and prosecute persons responsible for war crimes, genocide, crimes against humanity or other serious violations of international humanitarian law in order to prevent violations, avoid their recurrence and seek sustainable peace, justice, truth and reconciliation.

The role of the Security Council can be critical in ensuring and promoting accountability. In his report of 2012, the Secretary-General urged the Council to find ways of encouraging and possibly assisting States to ensure accountability for violations of international humanitarian and human rights law at the national level. He also urged the Council to play a more proactive role in ensuring an appropriate international response, where national authorities failed to take the steps necessary to ensure accountability. He further suggested that the steps that the Council might take included requesting or mandating the establishment of international commissions of inquiry and fact-finding missions, supporting their operation, making greater use of the information resulting from their work and supporting the implementation of their recommendations, including through follow-up action such as the establishment of reparation regimes and referral to the International Criminal Court.

Enhancing the implementation of protection mandates by peacekeeping and other relevant missions

United Nations peacekeeping missions constitute one of the most significant means at the Organization's disposal to protect civilians in situations of armed conflict. Since 1999, the Security Council has tasked United Nations peacekeeping missions with protection mandates. Such protection mandates include establishing effective early warning mechanisms, ensuring the provision of adequate resources to monitor, prevent and respond to incidents, and supporting the efforts of host country authorities to implement their responsibilities in protecting civilians. In addition, United Nations missions assist in creating protective environments by supporting the establishment of effective rule of law and security institutions.

In its resolution 1894 (2009), the Council reaffirmed its practice of ensuring that mandates of United Nations peacekeeping and other relevant missions included, where appropriate and on a case-by-case basis, provisions regarding the protection of civilians. It also reaffirmed the importance of entrusting peacekeeping and other relevant missions tasked with the protection of civilians with clear, credible and achievable mandates, based on accurate and reliable information on the situation on the ground, and a realistic assessment of threats against civilians and missions, made in consultation with all relevant stakeholders.

Ensuring the effective implementation of protection mandates by peacekeeping and other missions requires the involvement of a broad range of actors. In his report of 2012, the Secretary-General, pointing out that protecting civilians from the threat of physical violence was a joint endeavour involving the host State and the peacekeeping missions deployed to support it, urged host States to work more proactively with peacekeeping missions to protect civilians. He also urged Member States contributing military and police personnel to protection-mandated missions to utilize the Department of Peacekeeping Operations/Department of Field Support protection of civilians training modules prior to deployment.

Ensuring compliance with international humanitarian and human rights law to protect civilians, including, in particular, health-care providers, women and children

Sparing civilians from the effects of hostilities requires, among other things, strict compliance by parties to armed conflict with international humanitarian law. In its resolution 1894 (2009), the Security Council reiterated its condemnation in the strongest terms of attacks in situations of armed conflict directed against civilians and other protected persons or objects as flagrant violations of international humanitarian law. It also demanded that all parties should immediately put an end to such practices.

Attacks against health-care facilities and providers are of serious concern in several conflicts, the special protection afforded under international humanitarian law to medical staff and transport, hospitals, clinics and the like notwithstanding. In his report of 2012, the Secretary-General expressed his particular concern over attacks against health-care services, which, according to a study by the International Committee of the Red Cross, are one of the biggest, most complex and least recognized humanitarian issues of our time. The Secretary-General urged the Council to systematically condemn and call for the immediate cessation of attacks against or other forms of interference with health-care facilities, transport and providers and people seeking medical treatment, as well as acts of displacement, in violation of international law.

Women and children continue to suffer extreme violence and hardship during conflict. Sexual violence, including rape, remains tragically prominent among the atrocities to which women and girls are subjected. Children continue to be killed and maimed in conflict and are frequently forced to take up arms or are used as human shields by armed forces or groups. They are often disproportionately affected by displacement and deprived of education, health care and access to justice. The Security Council needs to pay continued attention to the specific needs of women and children, taking into account their particular vulnerabilities and concerns.

Letter dated 4 February 2013 from the Permanent Representative of Azerbaijan to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General

On instructions received from the Government of the Republic of Azerbaijan, I have the honour to address the issue of utmost importance for my country. As is well known, as a result of the military occupation by the Republic of Armenia of the Daghlyq Garabagh (Nagorno-Karabakh) region and seven other administrative districts of the Republic of Azerbaijan, 750,000 citizens of Azerbaijan were expelled from their homes in those territories. Today, there is no single Azerbaijani left in the occupied territories, likewise in Armenia, from where 250,000 Azerbaijanis were forced to leave at the end of the 1980s. In other words, both the territory of Armenia and the occupied territories of Azerbaijan were ethnically cleansed of their Azerbaijani population.

The fact that all Azerbaijanis were expelled from the occupied territories of Azerbaijan is well attested. In its relevant resolutions adopted in 1993 in response to the illegal use of force against Azerbaijan and occupation of its territories, the Security Council expressed grave concern at "the displacement of a large number of civilians". In its resolution 48/114 of 20 December 1993, the General Assembly noted with alarm "that the number of refugees and displaced persons in Azerbaijan has recently exceeded one million". The Representative of the Secretary-General on the human rights of internally displaced persons stated in his report dated 15 April 2008 (A/HRC/8/6/Add.2), that Azerbaijan has "one of the highest proportions of displaced persons in the world".

It should be noted that one of the indispensable conditions governing the ongoing political process towards the negotiated and international-law-based settlement of the conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan provides for the complete withdrawal of Armenian military forces from the occupied territories of Azerbaijan and the realization by all internally displaced persons and refugees of their right to return.

However, the policy and practice of Armenia clearly testify to its intention to prevent the return of Azerbaijanis to their homes by altering the demographic structure of the occupied territories of Azerbaijan. Thus, over the period that has passed since the beginning of the conflict, significant numbers of Armenian settlers have moved into these territories.

Armenia's breach of international humanitarian law and international human rights law in that regard has been clearly established. In 2005 and 2010, on the initiative of Azerbaijan, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) conducted fact-finding and field assessment missions in the occupied territories of Azerbaijan. The latter mission, led by the co-chairs of the OSCE Minsk Group was joined also by officials from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). The missions concluded that about 14,000 Armenian settlers had replaced 750,000 Azerbaijanis forced to leave. The co-chairs of the OSCE Minsk Group discouraged any further settlement of the occupied territories of Azerbaijan and urged the parties to refrain from any activities in those territories that would change the demographic, social or cultural character of the areas affected by the conflict (such as continued illegal settlement, infrastructure developments, economic exploitation, cultural changes, etc.) and would make it impossible to achieve a peaceful settlement.

Nevertheless, despite efforts made by the international community generally to condemn and discourage settlement of the occupied territories of Azerbaijan and to call for the prohibition of changing the demographic structure of the region, such settlement has continued. The latest reports about the transfer of Syrian Armenians into the Daghlyq Garabagh region and other occupied territories of Azerbaijan provide yet more ample evidence of Armenia's deliberate policy of colonization of Azerbaijani lands.

In his speech in the Ministry of Defence of Armenia on 15 January 2013, President Serzh Sargsyan of Armenia confirmed that "the Government of the Republic of Armenia continues to focus its attention on the problems of the Syrian Armenians" and that "almost 6,000 Armenians from Syria have found refuge in Armenia". He recognized that the Government of Armenia takes steps to address the needs of Armenian refugees from Syria (available from the website of the President of Armenia: www.president.am/en/press-release/item/2013/01/15/President-Serzh-Sargsyan-participated-at-the-meeting-Ministry-of-Defense/).

Against this background, according to mass media reports, among those Syrian Armenians arrived in Armenia, thirty families have moved further to the occupied territories of Azerbaijan and settled mostly in the Lachin district, an occupied area between the Daghlyq Garabagh region of Azerbaijan and Armenia itself. In order to encourage the Syrian Armenians to settle in the occupied territories, various incentives are provided for them, such as free housing, social infrastructure, inexpensive or free utilities, tax exemptions, plots of land, advantageous loans, money and livestock.

In other words, while the international community is focused on searching for ways out of the Syrian crisis, the suffering facing the people of that country are being utilized to further complicate the situation and peace efforts in another region. No doubt attempts to address the needs of refugees from Syria at the expense of hundreds of thousands of Azerbaijani displaced persons, living with the hope of returning to their homes, are illegal and cannot be tolerated nor accepted under any circumstances.

To the extent that Armenia has violated the relevant applicable law with regard to the occupation of Azerbaijani territory, it is responsible under international law. It is important to note in this regard that, as the occupying Power, Armenia is responsible not only for the actions of its own armed forces and other organs and agents of its Government, but also for the actions of the subordinate separatist regime illegally created by it in the occupied territories of Azerbaijan.

Taking into consideration the foregoing, I have been instructed to express my Government's strong protest against, and categorical rejection of, the Republic of Armenia's policy of colonization and annexation of the occupied territories of Azerbaijan. Such an irresponsible and provocative policy has no chance to succeed. These territories are internationally recognized as being part of Azerbaijan, and Armenia will be obliged to completely withdraw its armed forces from there and wipe out all the consequences of its illegal acts, including settlements.

It is clear that settlement and other illegal activities in the occupied territories of Azerbaijan pose an imminent threat to peace, security and stability in the region and undermine the rights and freedoms of hundreds of thousands of people uprooted from their homes. In this regard, I have the honour to convey my Government's request to all Member States, the Secretariat of the United Nations and relevant agencies to give careful consideration to ongoing settlement activities in the occupied territories of Azerbaijan and to take all necessary measures to prevent any further settlement of those territories and ensure that those who have already moved there are immediately and unconditionally resettled.

I should be grateful if you would have the present letter circulated as a document of the General Assembly, under agenda items 34, 39, 67, 69 and 83, and of the Security Council.

In accordance with instructions received from the Government of the Republic of Azerbaijan, I have the honour to draw your attention to the ongoing violations of the ceasefire by the armed forces of the Republic of Armenia recorded for November and December 2012 (see annexes I and II). According to the annexed information, during the reporting period, the armed forces of Armenia continued intensive fire from their positions in the occupied territories of Azerbaijan and from the territory of Armenia.
